

Name: _____

1.04 Muscular Medical Terminology

Across

1. the branch of biology that deal with the normal functions of living organism and their parts.
4. any of several muscles having two points of attachment at one end.
8. tonic spasm or temporary rigidity of one or more muscles, often characteristic of various muscular disorders.
10. consisting of a single cell.
11. deviating from what is normal or usual, typically in a way that is undesirable.
12. of muscle action taking place with normal contraction.

14. muscular partition separating the thorax from the abdomen, its contraction increases the volume of the thorax and inflates the lungs.

15. the muscular tissue of the heart.

16. loss of ability to understand or express speech, caused by brain damage.

Down

2. a chronic disorder characterized by widespread musculoskeletal pain, fatigue, and tenderness in localized areas.
3. paralysis of all four limbs.

5. an abnormal dilation of the colon, often accompanied by a paralysis of the peristaltic movements of the bowel.

6. a condition causing abnormal weakness of certain muscles.

7. relating to or denoting a pair of ductless glands situated above the kidneys.

9. decrease in size or wasting away of a body part or tissue.

13. any of several muscles having three points of attachment at one end.