

Application Activity 8

Across

3. When one uses situational attribution more than dispositional attribution to explain someone else's actions, they make the _____.
6. Type of therapy termed by Carl Rogers in which the client's perception of the psychologist was not exalted. This created an environment of unconditional positive regard for the client
7. A diagnosis psychologists Myers and McDougall termed for soldiers without observable head wounds yet suffered unusual anxiety, stupor, muteness, insomnia, and amnesia
10. Two factors have been identified as making dependable differences. One is the _____ of the source of the communication
12. An action in question is meritless (such as a failing grade on a paper), the actor will attribute it to situational factors ("The teacher hates me") but the observer to dispositional factors (stupidity) can be called the...
14. A term reserved for psychiatry
17. Piaget's successive stages in which a child would acquire the necessary skills to perceive and interact with the outside world

18. A German neurologist who fled World War 2 Germany and worked with Maslow. He termed self-actualization.

19. decried the materialism and determinism of both of the earlier forces and sought instead to steer away from heavy reliance on science and pseudoscience in order to celebrate human uniqueness and freedom and thus foster human well-being

20. The other factor of persuasion is the degree to which the _____ conflicts with the participant's initial stance

Down

1. Another primary focus in experimental social psychology has been the phenomena of persuasion and attitude change, which may also be referred to as _____.
2. the therapist passes no judgment, avoids authoritative poses, and is an avid listener, periodically addressing the client
4. Many experiments have shown that when people are given power over others, even if they started with the same amount of power and are from similar beginnings, they will act as if they are superior to those they have power over due to the effects of _____

5. the ways in which human participants describe the sources or causes of their actions

8. Maslow described "_____ " as a possible element of self-actualization

9. methods for problem-solving that turn out to be woefully mistaken.

11. One of the factors that can likely persuade a participant's attitude is the _____ of the source of the communication

13. a comparative psychologist, who coined the term "humanistic psychology" to identify a new approach to psychology

15. It is possible to collapse the prominent areas of social-psychological research thus far reviewed into a single topic: _____.

16. The expectations of participants in experiments often times don't come true because they are incorrect about the use of the study due to _____