

Name: _____

Date: _____

Chapter 9

Across

1. The tension between integration and separation also operates externally, when people in a relationship struggle to meet the competing needs

3. Operates both between partners and when they face others outside the relationship

11. Relationship that is a hollow shell of its former self

12. When stagnation becomes too unpleasant, people in a relationship begin to create distance between each other

13. Partners reduce the scope of their contact with each other.

14. We want to be close to others, but at the same time we seek independence

16. To show that you are interested in making contact and to demonstrate that you are a person worth talking to

17. When stagnation becomes too unpleasant, people in a relationship begin to create distance between each other

18. When partners make symbolic public gestures to show the world their relationship exists and that a commitment has been made

19. the conflicting desires for connection and independence are embodied

20. Conflicts that arise when two opposing or incompatible forces exist simultaneously

Down

2. A comparison between the rewards she receives in her present situation and those could expect to receive in others

4. When one partner violates the explicit or implicit rules terms of the relationships

5. Minimum standard of what behavior is acceptable

6. is about helping others during challenging times by providing emotional, informational, and instrumental resources

7. Describes messages that refer to other messages

8. Other researchers have suggested that any model of relational communication ought to contain a third area aimed at keeping relationships operating smoothly and satisfactorily

9. It usually doesn't take long for communicators who are interested in one another move from initiating to

10. Partners often find themselves needing to reestablish their individual identities in a stage

15. the kind of qualitatively interpersonal relationship defined in chapter1