

Name: _____

Date: _____

Clinical VI Crossword

Across

2. Which type of body habitus typically requires that the image receptor be placed crosswise rather than lengthwise for a posteroanterior (PA) chest?

6. During barium enema fluoroscopy, the radiologist detects a possible defect in the right colic flexure. He asks the technologist to produce a radiograph that will best demonstrate this region of the large intestine. Which one of the following positions will accomplish this goal?

7. A projection in which the CR skims the body part

8. What is the correct anatomic name for the Adam's apple? Sternum

9. Which part of the small intestine has a feathery appearance when filled with barium?

10. Which term describes an abnormal accumulation of fluid in the peritoneal cavity of the abdomen?

Down

1. Which aspect of the large intestine is located highest, or most superior, in the abdomen?

3. A patient is lying on her back facing the x-ray tube. The right side of her body is turned 20° toward the image receptor. What is this radiographic position?

4. What is an older term for the hepatopancreatic sphincter?

5. What type of tissue binds together and supports the various structures of the body?