Across

2. Early decision is similar to early action, but if the students is accepted to the college/university, it is a binding agreement and the student must attend that school. Early decision applications are only prudent if it is definitely a "first choice" school.

7. Most colleges/universities award a "bachelor's degree" when the student completes his/her required course work and graduates.

8. Income-eligible students may be able to waive or reduce college application fees and related ACT/SAT fees. Check the college board and/or the college directly for more info about fee waiver options.

9. Can include students of all races but primarily serves African American students. Many HBCUs were formed after the American civil war to offer graduate and undergraduate degrees for Black Americans.

10. Colleges issue "acceptances", "denials" and "waitlists." Students waitlisted maybe accepted later if other students already accepted or ahead of them on the waitlist choose not to go to that school. If waitlisted definitely call the school and tell them how/why you are interested in attending that school and ask when the waitlist applicants will be notified about acceptance status.

11. Primarily offer degree's in undergraduate programs that focus on fine and performing arts, business, or engineering.

Down

1. Includes information about the student's class rank, GPA, academic courses, attendance rate, and any discipline incidents. It may also include recommendation from the counselor and / or teachers. The SR is part of the college application requirements and is usually completed by a high school guidance counselor.

3. Is awarded when a student completed his/her four-year college/university coursework and requirements.

4. Unlike subsidized loans, the government does not supplement interest accrued during college.

5. Are typically schools that offer two-year degrees in specific employment preparation skills such as computer technology, culinary arts, and health care.

6. Some colleges/universities offer "early action" deadlines by which students submit their full application before the regular deadline and receive their acceptance status earlier than the regular deadline. If accepted, the student does not have to commit to attending the school. See "early decision."
