

Quarter 3 Vocabulary Review

Across

1. - A mobile phone with advanced functions beyond just making phone calls and sending text messages (SMS).
4. A stack of rigid disks, usually inside the computer, where data is stored magnetically.
6. Stands for "Uniform Resource Locator". It is the address of a specific website or file on the internet.
9. A document that stores data in a grid of horizontal rows and vertical columns. Each cell can store a unique instance of data.
10. A portable computer that uses a touchscreen as the primary input device instead of a keyboard and/or mouse.
12. The file extension for a Microsoft Word Document. Note that in more recent versions of MS Word (after 2007) the file extension is DOCX.
13. Stands for "Universal Serial Bus" and it refers to the most common type of computer port used to connect peripheral devices to computers.

15. The primary user interface of a computer from which users can access programs, files and folders.

16. Unwanted and unsolicited "junk" email or irrelevant postings to a newsgroup or blog.
17. The right to be protected from unwanted or unsanctioned intrusions.

19. Stands for the "Joint Photographic Experts Group" which was the name of the committee that developed this format for digital pictures. It is a very common and extremely portable format for digital pictures and graphics on the internet.

20. Using the internet to create a virtual community by sharing messages, comments and other information using websites designed for that purpose.

Down

2. Refers to a portable hardware device that is designed to display textual data like e-books, electronic magazines and digital newspapers.

3. The software that communicates with the hardware and allows other programs to run. (such as Windows XP, Windows 7, Apple OS X)

5. Also known as notebook computers. They are portable computers that consist of a screen, keyboard and a mouse device.

7. Stands for "Portable Document Format" and it describes a file format that was developed and distributed for free by Adobe Systems. It can be used to display and print documents, text, fonts, and formatting from a variety of applications.

8. A small laptop or notebook style computer in the $200-$400 price range that is primarily designed for web surfing.

11. A display that also serves as an input device that can be used with a special pen device or fingers.

14. A video camera used to broadcast streaming or still video using the internet.

18. Stands for "Internet Service Provider" and it is the company that you contract with to supply you with a connection to the internet.