Research

Across

1. A synthesis of what is known, and not known about the efficacy of a partcular intervetion based on the most robust evidence available for critical appraisal

5. the skewing of research data

7. A specific research technique derived from market research where a number of people are brough together to discuss a topic

12. A type of randomised controlled trial where neither the investigators nor the trial partcipants are aware of who is receiving the active or placebo treatment

13. A quantitative method to collect data from a population sample at one point in time

14. The extent to which the research instruments and concepts are stable and able to yield an unvarying measure

17. A design where the same phenomenology, an institute, custom, tradition, or culture is compared within two or more contrasting socio cultural settings

18. a selected population that is studied over time to investigate the effect of a particular factor on health outcomes

19. the selection of one or more exampes of a phenomenom as a unit of analysis

20. Another word for constructivism

21. A technique for obtaining a sample by contacting known, rather than randomly selected informants

Down

2. A set of guidelines and principles used to gather information for research

3. The 'truthfulness' or accuracy of research findings used to test whether an indicator is measuring the concept it is intended to measure

4. research that compares the characteristics of a particular phenomenon in the group of interest to a control or reference group

6. Research begins with a general area of interest rather than a hypothesis and moves on to identify the concepts emerging from the data

8. A method for collecting data from communities and groups through observation, interview and tha analysis or cultural artefacts to develop theories and explanations

9. A method is this

10. the practice of selecting information from a population

11. A non active treatment used in a trial

15. A Participant method that engages people in the research to gain knowledge for action and change

16. The refining words 'and' 'or' 'not'