

Technology for Diverse Learners

Across

8. acrylic or metal covers with holes for each of the keys that are placed atop the computer keyboard.
9. equipment or products used to increase, maintain, or improve functional capabilities of a child with a disability
11. programs that make an educated guess about the next word a student wants to type.
12. feature that allows students to press keys sequentially to execute functions that typically require pressing the keys simultaneously.

Down

1. can be configured to meet students' individual needs
2. an approach that recognizes and targets instruction to the varying abilities found in the same classroom.
3. files of text that have been converted into electronic format
4. / offer keys that are larger and have a larger surface area than those of the standard keyboard.

5. providing support for learners by taking them from their individual baseline and moving them beyond the point
6. monitor or attachment that is responsive to a simple touch on its surface
7. made by recording a person reading a book aloud
10. can support students who have no usable vision or who become fatigued from using screen magnification.